

An Invitation to Share Insight That May Help Hawai'i's Acquired Brain Injury (TBI & nTBI) Community Thrive

Hawai'i

Aloha,

Thank you for taking the time to read this letter and for the work your organization has done in service to acquired brain injury (TBI & nTBI) survivors, caregivers, and families.

Ola Compass was born from lived experience, a deep commitment to the acquired brain injury (TBI & nTBI) community, and faith in the guidance of Heavenly Father. It was created through a deeply personal journey that opened the door to a larger calling: to help acquired brain injury (TBI & nTBI) survivors and the people who care for them navigate this path with greater clarity, dignity, compassion, and hope.

Ola Compass is based in Hawai'i and is currently in a season of listening, learning, and research. It began as an LLC on purpose so that time could be taken to better understand what is truly needed before building further. The long-term vision includes establishing a nonprofit that reflects the real needs of Hawai'i's acquired brain injury (TBI & nTBI) community and is informed by both local voices and the wisdom of organizations that have walked this road before us.

This outreach is being extended with humility and genuine respect. Across the continental United States, there are organizations, providers, and programs that have developed meaningful ways to support acquired brain injury (TBI & nTBI) survivors and help them do more than simply survive. Ola Compass hopes to learn from that experience: what has made the greatest difference, what has produced meaningful outcomes, what has supported caregivers well, what has not worked, and what lessons might help guide stronger support here in Hawai'i.

To help gather that insight, Ola Compass has created a voluntary questionnaire for organizations, providers, and practitioners outside Hawai'i. The questionnaire asks about programs, services, approaches, outcomes, funding, partnerships, training, gaps, lessons learned, and what it may take to bring something similar to Hawai'i. If you are willing, please consider completing the questionnaire below.

For now, the best way to reach Ola Compass directly is by email at io@olacompass.com or through our website — we would love to continue this conversation with you.
